

Misclassification

Employee or Independent Contractor?
The Risks of Getting it Wrong

With recent high-profile cases addressing worker classification issues and the Department of Labor's issuance of guidance on proper classification, employers across the country are evaluating their independent contractor relationships to determine whether they would survive scrutiny under the many tests applicable to their workers.

Join Hinshaw's Labor & Employment attorneys for an informative webinar series addressing classification issues that confound even the most sophisticated employers. Each program will provide analysis on both the federal and state law affecting proper worker classification.

- How can you tell employees and independent contractors apart?
- What do you need to do to avoid the perils of misclassification?
- The advantages (and dangers) of the independent contractor designation
- The penalties for misclassification

Who Should Attend
