About Katie

Katie represents healthcare providers in medical negligence cases and counsels them on various issues, including legal compliance, regulatory matters, medical staff issues, risk management, investigations and audits, and employment challenges. She also defends providers before the Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation (IDFPR).

Facing a medical negligence case can be a stressful experience for healthcare providers. Katie guides clients through litigation, providing customized defense strategies for each case.

Katie defends malpractice claims and serves as outside general counsel for hospitals and health systems. She advises on policy development, billing issues, corporate governance, and daily operations. With experience as in-house counsel at a community hospital, she focuses on practical solutions that avoid overburdening the organization.

Katie assists healthcare facilities with behavioral health matters, including court proceedings under the Mental Health Code and privacy issues related to mental health records. She also coordinates with state agencies on patient placements and represents long-term care facilities in negligence cases, collaborating with hospitals and clinicians on peer reviews and medical staff issues.
