About Rachel

Rachel represents individuals and corporations in general liability and commercial litigation across various industries, including construction and transportation, in state and federal courts and alternative dispute resolution. She also advises employers on workplace disputes.

A zealous litigator, Rachel has skillfully defended a wide range of clients. From favorable settlements and verdicts to success on dispositive motion practice, she is intent on achieving the best possible outcomes for her clients. An “out of the box” thinker, she navigates even the most challenging cases to resolution in line with her clients’ goals.

Before joining Hinshaw, Rachel built her experience in construction litigation, representing owners and contractors in New York Labor Law cases. She also defended healthcare professionals in malpractice lawsuits and attorneys in professional liability matters.

During law school, Rachel completed externships with a New York State Supreme Court Justice and the Kings County District Attorney’s Office.
